Waiting continues as to what Cyprus imposes on bank accounts at a parliamentary vote this afternoon (already delayed once; could well be delayed again given magnitude of proposal). It could be that the levy is softened to ease or even remove any burden from smaller accounts (<€100k) and honour bank deposit guarantees. Whatever is decided is key in terms of what people perceive could be demanded elsewhere in Eurozone if more bailouts required. Strong recovery from yesterday's lows, but limited progress since. Where we stand, potential for 100pt move either way - to prior highs if small savers spared; to yesterday's lows if they are made to pay.
